

Table of Contents

Acknowledgments	9
Introduction	11
1 The Festival as Site for the Promotion of National Cultures, 1939-1968	23
1.1 With Hollywood against Hollywood	23
1.2 The Festival as a Definitional Context for National Cinema	30
1.3 Hollywood's Handicap in the Diplomatic Arena	34
1.4 The Art-versus-Commerce Conflict	42
1.5 US Government Interests in the Cold War	46
2 The Star as a Symbiosis between Hollywood and Cannes	55
2.1 The Star as a Means of Market Control	55
2.2 Cannes Legitimizes Itself with Hollywood Stars	58
2.3 The Festival as a Site for Star Production: The Rise of Brigitte Bardot	63
2.4 Fear of Scandal: Hollywood is Thrifty with its Stars	71
3 The Auteur in Commercial Hollywood	83
3.1 The Rise of the politique des auteurs in Cahiers du cinéma	83
3.2 The politique in the Festival	87
3.3 Critique of the Reception Authorities	108
4 New Hollywood and a New Period of Accord, 1969-1981	131
4.1 Reform of the Selection Process	131
4.2 The End of an Era: The Cancellation of the 1968 Festival	134
4.3 Cannes as a Site of Success for Hollywood in Crisis	143
4.4 What Can Films Do for the Festival?	167
4.5 End of the Transatlantic Accord	183
5 Risks and Opportunities for Blockbusters, 1975-1997	195
5.1 Cannes as an Avoidable Risk	195
5.2 Hollywood's Strategies for Exploiting Media Concentration	219
5.3 The politique des acteurs at the Festival	247
5.4 The Independents Conquer Cannes	262
6 Cultural Exception versus Monoculture, 1994-2008	269
6.1 The New Ice Age, 1994-2000	269
6.2 The Festival as Launch Pad, 2001-2008	284

Conclusion	307
Notes	313
Bibliography	345
Appendix	361
Index of Film Titles	373
Index of Names	379
Index of Subjects	391