

CONTENTS

FOREWORD

INTRODUCTION

THE AGASSIZ TRADING OFFICE (1832 -1866) 13

From the Raiguel Jeune trading office to the Agassiz trading office 16

The first indication of a shift towards industrialisation 21

The trading office's commercial outlets 23

THE FRANCILLON FACTORY (1866 -1900) 25

The founding of the factory (1866-1876) 30

Longines' marked dependence on the American market 37

The financial challenge of industrialisation 44

The impact of the Exhibition in Philadelphia (1876) 46

The company is reorganised and flourishes (1877-1900) 53

The modernisation of the production system 53

The development of new products 54

Reorganisation of work processes 59

The expansion of the markets 65

The start of advertising 69

The modernisation of Longines' legal structure 73

THE CREATION OF A MODERN FACTORY (1900-1935) 77

A new set of directors 79

The second generation of directors 79

The company's financial policy 88

The creation of a modern factory 90

Designing the calibres 92

Equipping the factory 101

The hierarchical organisation of the production system 105

The development of paternalism 111

Productivity fluctuates 114

Projects for diversification 116

Cooperation with other watch manufacturers 119

The development of the markets 121

The development of advertising 128

GROWTH ON THE BACK OF THE AMERICAN MARKET (1936 -1970) 139

Changes in the organisation and the financing of the company 141

The difficulties of modernising corporate management 141

Growing dependence on bank loans	146	APPENDICES	257
Adapting the production system to growing demand	149	The administrative officers of Longines	257
The development of new products	155	Associates of the Raiguel Jeune & Cie trading office, later the Agassiz & Cie trading office (1832-1861)	257
The creation of a self-winding watch	159	Managers of the Agassiz & Cie trading office (1846-1861)	257
The difficulties of launching an electric watch	162	Managing partners of Ernest Francillon & Cie (1862-1895)	257
Longines and the quartz revolution	164	Monitoring committee of the limited partnership (1895-1915)	257
Ensuring an adequate, skilled labour force	168	Managers of the limited partnership (1895-1915)	257
The development of the markets: the United States and the rest of the world	176	Board of directors of the limited company (1915 to the present day)	257
The birth of a commercial bureaucracy	184	General managers of the limited company (1915 to the present day)	259
The increasing use of publicity	185	Technical directors of the limited company (1915-1984)	259
A difficult path towards concentration	191	Commercial directors of the limited company (1915-1988)	259
 		Turnover (1895-1984)	260
MAJOR CHANGES IN THE SWISS WATCHMAKING INDUSTRY (1971-1988)	201	Volume of sales (1895-1984)	261
Longines' integration into the General Watch Co. group (GWC)	203	Number of employees (1867-1984)	261
Developing new products	212	Brandnames and logos (trademarks) registered by Longines	262
Longines' markets in the 1970s and the emergence of the Far East	221
The founding of the SMH and its impact on Longines	228	REFERENCES	263
 		Archives	263
THE BIRTH OF A GLOBAL BRAND (1988-2012)	231	Published sources	263
CONCLUSION	252	Bibliography	263
POSTFACE	255	Iconography	266